

1. Are you presently mentoring (formally or informally) one or more people? Please list their names and how long you've been mentoring them.

In this question I personally didn't think it would be necessary to list people's name for others there might be people who don't mentor people but I think how would you mentor would be a valid question instead of who which methods we use or the methods one should use to mentor would be more efficient to clarify and see the person's perspective.

2. List your ministry experiences (dates, locations, details of the experience) including your present ministry involvement.

Again good question but since the questionnaire are for people who are interested in leadership there might be people who haven't involved in a ministry but instead its possible to ask about the calling or which type of ministry besides this would one want to be involved in to include the people who haven't been in any ministries yet.

3. Share an incident where you were forced to exercise faith and God clearly intervened.

It was a bit challenging for me to answer this question I had a lot of thought about it and I didn't get the main idea of what the question is about I mean yes God always intervenes but I was a bit confused to answer the question but the question was a good question which made me think a bit deeper about my past and helped me to be thankful for what has been done for me.

4. Share an incident where you were forced to exercise faith and God clearly intervened.

This question was good honestly but incidents happen and I was a bit challenged to choose or which one I wanted to talk about.

5. Other than the Bible, which book or movie has most impacted your life? How?

I feel like this question is quite similar to the one below it which asks about our five favorite books in the next question may be if its possible to make it one question to not repeat the same thing
